Story on Good Friday Procession in Nicaragua

Attached is an updated Public Diplomacy Calendar, which we hope you will continue to find useful.

Also attached is a one-page transcript of a recent story on ABC's World News Tonight, in which Peter Collins reported that a massive Good Friday Procession in Nicaragua changed from a religious procession into more of a political demonstration against the Sandinistas. The Procession, led by the Archbishop of Managua, symbolizes the growing tension between the Nicaraguan Catholic Church and the Sandinista government. ABC was the only one of the three major networks which reported this story.

PROGRAM: ABC World News Tonight

DATE: April 20, 1984

SUBJECT: Good Friday Procession

DAVID BRINKLEY: In Managua, Nicaragua, a huge crowd gathered for a Good Friday procession, and then the ceremony turned from religious to political.

ABC's Peter Collins in Managua.

PETER COLLINS: A crowd estimated at 100,000 turned out for this annual Good Friday procession. It turned into a passionate demonstration of solidarity with the Catholic Church and opposition to the Sandinista regime. On a sweltering hot day, the marchers moved patiently to a plaza in front of the National Cathedral, pausing along the way to say the Stations of the Cross. They were led by the Archbishop of Managua, Miguel Obando y Bravo, in an explicit rebuff to Sandinista leaders, who had said he was out of touch with the people. The marchers shouted, "Free Nicaragua," and "Christ forever."

None of the Sandinista leaders was present. Most are declared atheists.

In a defiant gesture, the march was organized by Bismarck Carballo, a priest the regime tried to discredit last year by luring him to a woman's house, where he was stripped naked by plainclothes police and forced out into the streets.

The Church here has begun to take on the role and character of the Church in Poland. It is becoming the focus of opposition to the Sandinista regime.

No police were present because the Sandinistas know the Church is the one force that can rally the people against the government. For their part, church leaders said nothing directly against the regime, but emphasized the need for Catholic faith, which here, as in Poland, means no to Marxism.
